Chapter five

Of worries

Although Batou had said it again and again. Even turned angry every time Togusa worried and fussed instead, this time was different.

This time he was glad, glad that the human hadn't listened. That he had worried.

Because he couldn't phantom what he might have done if it had been his human partner in the Tiltrotor. His fragile body, broken and ripped apart by the force of the explosion, caused by that crazed suicide bomber.

And he still felt vaguely sick at the relief he felt in the moment his mind realised that it had 'only' been Ishikawa, who was injured.

So when they were alone, the tall cyborg caught Togusa in a tight embrace and didn't let go.

And although the smaller man seemed bewildered at Batou's sudden antic, he soon sensed the cyborgs fears. Resting his head on the blonde's shoulder and with a content smile he leaned into his partner.

Not too cheesy, I hope.
